TANIA SALGADO, AIA, LEED AP, OF RNL, AWARDED AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF ARCHITECTS WESTERN MOUNTAIN REGION YOUNG ARCHITECT OF THE YEAR

RNL also wins merit award for unbuilt architecture for the Blue Rondo project

Denver, Colorado, September 19, 2007—RNL is pleased to announce that RNL Associate Principal Tania Salgado, AIA, LEED AP, has been awarded the AIA Western Mountain Region Young Architect of the Year award. The WMR chapter of the AIA is comprised of six western states, including Colorado. The award is presented to an outstanding architect who has been licensed for 10 years or less. The award was presented at the chapter's annual gala in Reno, Nevada on September 15th. Salgado also won Young Architect of the Year from the Denver Chapter of the AIA in 2006.

“To have achieved such a mature view and focused architecture at this early point in a career is exemplary,” said Michael Brendle, FAIA, design principal at RNL, when he nominated Salgado. “She is exemplary in the depth of thought, emotion, passion and creativity. However, she is equally thoughtful and complete in her approach to the technical aspects, carefully crafting work to allow full resolution and embodiment of the design concept,” Brendle added.

RNL also received a merit award from the AIA WMR chapter in the unbuilt architecture category for the Blue Rondo project, which was proposed office tower for downtown Denver.
